RESEARCH INTERESTS

Translation history in the late Qing and early Republican China; Network analysis and digital methods in translation studies; Translation of Chinese theatre in the West.

PUBLICATIONS

Huang, Junhao. “History, Statistics, Network: Mapping the Translation of Detective Fiction in Late Qing and Early Republican China”. Foreign Studies, accepted for publication, forthcoming.

- Methodological Paradigm Shift: Drawing inspiration from history and literary historiography, this research introduces social network tools to the field of translation studies. Despite the prevalence of SNA in other digital humanities sectors, translation history research has largely remained centered on corpus linguistics, resulting in a methodological hiatus. Consequently, this study utilizes SNA to examine late Qing and early Republican detective fiction, reconstructing the relational networks that defined the translation landscape of the period.
- Distant Reading and Close Reading: Leveraged Gephi to model complex networks, applying metrics such as Centrality (Degree, Betweenness, Eigenvector) and Community Detection to identify influential nodes and social clusters among translators and newspapers. Combining quantitative visualization with historical interpretation, the research offers a multidimensional understanding of the network’s structural features and the historical phenomena behind them.

Huang, Junhao and Li, Hongyu. “Translation Studies from a Critical Race Perspective: A Review of Translation and Race”. Asia Pacific Interdisciplinary Translation Studies, Vol.18, 2027, pp.-, forthcoming (Book Review)

- Critically reviewed Corine Tachtiris’s Translation and Race, bridging Critical Race Theory with postcolonial translation studies to propose a new research agenda for integrating racial discourse into the Chinese academic context.
- Conceptualized an anti-racist translation ethics and practice, advocating for a shift in Chinese translation history studies toward a more nuanced examination of racial ideologies and systemic inequalities.

CONFERENCE PRESENTATIONS

INCSA Revolution, Revelation, Reconciliation

Jul 2026

The International Nineteenth Century Studies Association (INCSA)

National Union Building, Washington, DC (Online)

“From Empire to the Globe: The Translational Evolution of Han Gongqiu and the Changing Images of xiqu in the West”

- A Survey of Extant Western Translations: Initiated in the 19th century, the Western reception of Han Gongqiu marks a seminal chapter in the global journey of Chinese theatre (xiqu). Despite its significance, existing research often focuses on individual case studies, leaving the macro-level cultural logic behind its historical transformations largely unexamined. This paper historiographically traces the work’s century-long translation history, analyzing its shifting paradigms to uncover the broader dynamics of Chinese theatrical discourse in the West.
- Comparative Analysis and Historical Interpretation: Rooted in the macro-historical contexts of the target texts, this study elucidates the underlying causes and patterns of their translation and reception. The findings reveal that, under the influence of shifting ideologies, artistic trends, cultural ecologies, and political climates, the translations of Han Gongqiu underwent a diachronic transformation: progressing from aggressive translation and assimilative translation to faithful translation, and ultimately to heterogenized translation.

10th World Conference of Chinese Studies

Aug 2026

World Association for Chinese Studies (Young Scholar Award)

The University of Hong Kong

- “Between Translation, Commerce, and Politics: Unveiling the Identity and Motives of Chen Enrong within Kang Youwei’s Overseas Qinqiang Movement”
- Received the Young Scholar Award, ranked 2nd out of 29 student participants in the “Modern and Contemporary History” category, following a rigorous double-blind peer review process conducted by the World Association for Chinese Studies. The paper has also been accepted for the Biennial Conference of European Association for Chinese Studies (EACS) amid fierce competition (1,780 submissions in total)
 - Unveiling the Hidden Translator: In the aftermath of the Hundred Days’ Reform, Kang Youwei fled overseas to escape the Qing government’s pursuit, seeking international military intervention to restore the Emperor. To garner British support, Kang, traveled to the United Kingdom accompanied by his British translator, Chen Enrong. Despite being Kang’s first official translator during his exile, Chen remains completely overlooked in existing scholarship, Drawing upon core historical archives, this study examines Chen’s life and his multifaceted identities within Kang’s inner circle.
 - Historical Interpretation via Translation: This research deciphers Chen’s motives for facilitating Kang’s communication as a representative of Hong Kong merchant—He Dong’s interests. Through this archival recovery of the translator, the study highlights the conflicting objectives of Hong Kong commercial circles and the exiled politician.
