RESEARCH INTERESTS

The history of translation and literature/politics in the late Qing and early Republican China; network analysis and digital methods in translation studies.

PUBLICATIONS

Huang, Junhao. "A Reformer More Than Kang Youwei? Examining the Identity and Motivations of Chen Enrong, the 'Royalist Interpreter' ". Journal of Translation Studies, Vol. 10, Issue 1, 2026.

- Archival reconstruction of a neglected interpreter: Reconstructed the life and multiple identities of Chen Enrong, Kang Youwei's British interpreter during his exile, based on newspapers, correspondence, and other archival materials from Hong Kong repositories and open-access collections.
- Interests and political alignments: Examined Chen's motivations for interpreting for Kang and used his multiple identities and eventual separation from Kang to illuminate the divergent interests and positions of Hong Kong's business community and the exiled political figures surrounding Kang.

Huang, Junhao. "History, Statistics, Network: Mapping the Translation of Detective Fiction in Late Qing and Early Republican China". Foreign Studies, accepted for publication, 2027, forthcoming.

- Social Network Analysis of Translation History: Collected and organized historical data on the translation of detective fiction in late Qing and early Republican China, and used Gephi to visualize the relationships among translators, newspapers, and other actors involved in translation activities.
- Network Analysis and Historical Interpretation: Applied centrality measures and community detection to identify key newspapers, influential translators, and major network clusters, and combined the network results with historical sources to examine the structural features of the translation network and the historical phenomena underlying them.

Huang, Junhao and Li, Hongyu. "Translation Studies from a Critical Race Perspective: A Review of Translation and Race". Asia Pacific Interdisciplinary Translation Studies, Vol.18, 2027, forthcoming (Book Review)

- Critically reviewed Corine Tachtiris's Translation and Race, bridging Critical Race Theory with postcolonial translation studies to propose a new research agenda for integrating racial discourse into the Chinese academic context.
- Conceptualized an anti-racist translation ethics and practice, advocating for a shift in Chinese translation history studies toward a more nuanced examination of racial ideologies and systemic inequalities.

CONFERENCE PRESENTATIONS

INCSA Revolution, Revelation, Reconciliation

Jul 2026

The International Nineteenth Century Studies Association (INCSA)

National Union Building, Washington, DC (Online)

"From Empire to the Globe: The Translational Evolution of Han Gongqiu and the Changing Images of xiqu in the West"

- Tracing a Century of Translation History: Conducted a diachronic study of the Western translations of Han Gongqiu from the nineteenth century onward, systematically examining the changing characteristics of its translations and reception across different periods.
- Translation and Historical Context: Applied a descriptive approach and contextualized the translations within their broader historical settings, identifying a diachronic shift from aggressive and assimilative translation to faithful and heterogenizing translation, shaped by changes in ideology, artistic trends, cultural environments, and political circumstances.
